Brief Description of Class Series

Teachers utilize professional training and experience to plan lessons and curriculums and instruct and evaluate the performance and progress of individuals* in an academic or commercial subject area. Such subject areas are in fields recognized by the New York State Department of Education.

Incumbents of these positions work with diverse groups of individuals that have broad ranges of social and academic backgrounds, interests, physical and/or developmental disabilities, and/or mental illness. Positions are classified in agencies with formal education programs, such as the Office of Children and Family Services, Department of Corrections and Community Supervision, and Office of Mental Health.

*Individual refers to a person who is being treated or cared for, and is used in place of patient, client, or other nomenclature specific to an agency.

Distinguishing Characteristics

Teachers at various levels have similar duties and responsibilities. They instruct a course in an academic or commercial discipline; prepare or modify curriculum and course outlines; prepare daily or weekly lesson plans; conduct a schedule of formal instruction for individual learners of a State agency; and devise methods and conduct evaluations of the performance and progress of learners. The Teacher levels are distinguished from each other by the incumbent’s level of academic and instructional preparation as evidenced by the type of professional certification achieved and length and appropriateness of teaching experience. Teachers may plan, instruct, and evaluate individuals in other disciplines than their primary professional certification.
Related Classes

Vocational Instructors, utilizing both professional and practical training and experience, plan lessons and instruct and evaluate the performance and progress of individuals in vocational and trades specialties. Instruction includes a verbal and written presentation of the theoretical along with demonstrations of practical applications of that theory.

Illustrative Duties

Makes plans for teaching assignments consistent with and based on overall course objectives.
